2. Will you be using any federal-veteran education benefits or tuition assistance (e.g. GI Bill, Dependents' Educational Assistance) to assist in financing your legal education?

No

3. Will you be using any state-veteran education benefits or tuition assistance (e.g. Hazlewood Act) to assist with financing your legal education?

No

14. Character and Fitness

1. ACADEMIC INSUFFICIENCY: Have you ever been warned, placed on probation, suspended, dropped, dismissed, expelled, or otherwise disciplined due to academic performance by any institution of higher education (i.e., community college, college, university, graduate school, or professional school)?

You are advised to review your transcripts for notation of academic probation, suspension, etc.

No

2. ACADEMIC OR PERSONAL MISCONDUCT: Have you been subject to discipline or sanction for academic or personal misconduct by any institution of higher education, or have you been allowed to withdraw from such an institution to avoid such discipline, or are any such charges pending against you?

Discipline or sanction may include adjustment of assignment or course grade, assignment of community service, assignment of educational opportunity or training, any form of conduct-related suspension or probation, or any other adverse action. You must report an incident regardless of whether a record of it was retained in your file. Discipline or sanction by university administrators, professors or other teaching staff, and other officials should be reported.

Examples of academic misconduct include, but are not limited to, academic cheating, honor code violations, plagiarism, unauthorized use of artificial intelligence, and other academic dishonesty.

Examples of personal misconduct include, but are not limited to, violations of residence hall policies, alcohol and drug violations, non-academic honor code violations, and other non-academic conduct violations.

You must report any currently alleged or pending charges, violations, and/or sanctions.

No

3. CRIMINAL ISSUES: Have you ever been arrested for, cited or ticketed for, charged with, convicted of, placed on probation or deferred adjudication for, or pled guilty or nolo contendere (no contest) to any criminal violation or offense, other than minor traffic violations, or are any such charges pending against you?

Minor traffic violations (e.g., speeding and parking tickets) need not be disclosed. You must report any violation involving the use of drugs and alcohol, regardless of the severity of the incident. You must report charges of driving under the influence of drugs or alcohol; charges of reckless driving; any failure to appear resulting from a minor traffic violation; failure to appear resulting from any other offense; any failure to maintain financial responsibility (i.e., legally-required auto insurance); and any attempt, whether successful or not, to suspend or revoke your driver's license.

It is not necessary to disclose information about a juvenile or criminal record that has been sealed or expunged; however, it is up to you to ensure that your offense is in fact expunged and/or sealed under the relevant state law. Mistaken belief or detrimental reliance upon the advice of a third party (such as an attorney or judge) is no excuse for the failure to disclose a reportable offense that has not actually been expunged or sealed. To ensure that you do not run afoul of this exception, you should obtain a copy of the signed Motion and Order of Expungement from the court in question. Please note deferred adjudication is not expungement, and cases decided on deferred adjudication should be reported.

No

4. PROFESSIONAL DISCIPLINE: Have you ever been reprimanded, suspended, placed on probation or warning, or otherwise disciplined by any professional organization, licensing board, or state agency charged with reviewing professional conduct; had a professional license denied, suspended, or revoked; or had other disciplinary action filed against you related to a license to practice a trade, business, or profession? If you have never held a professional license, please check "No."

No

5. EMPLOYMENT DISCIPLINE: Have you ever been terminated or permitted to resign in lieu of termination from a job since you completed high school?

No

6. BANKRUPTCY/CIVIL PROCEEDINGS: Have you ever been a party to a bankruptcy (business or personal) or other civil proceeding in which you were alleged to have committed fraud or any type of misrepresentation, engaged in grossly negligent or reckless conduct, or engaged in the willful destruction of property?

No

You do not have to disclose voluntary, non-court-ordered hospitalization.

No

8. MILITARY DISCIPLINE: Have you ever been subject to administrative or disciplinary proceedings, dismissed, or other than honorably discharged from the armed forces? If you have never served in any branch of the armed forces, please check "No."

No

9. CONTINUING DUTY TO DISCLOSE

Please note that neither the submission of your application nor matriculation absolves you of your continuing duty to disclose any existing, pending, or new allegation, circumstance, or incident which would require you to answer "Yes" to any of the above Character and Fitness questions. If you discover that you have omitted an incident, or you receive the final disposition of a pending incident, or you are involved in a new incident, you must notify the admissions office immediately. You will be required to submit a written statement providing details regarding the reportable incident.

By checking this box, I agree to provide any necessary updates and amendments to the above Character and Fitness questions to the admissions office in a prompt and timely manner.

3. Date:

19-September-2025

I'm walking down a dimly lit city street. The air is thick and muffles sound. Footsteps echo behind me, steady and deliberate. I don't turn around. I already know how this ends. I quicken my pace. So do they. A flash of metal catches the light. A knife. My chest tightens. Then, the blade swings.

I wake up.

No panic. Just the hum of my ceiling fan and the glow of my laptop, still open to a case file. Another crime report. Another name. Another story that isn't mine but somehow I'm living it. I'm a research assistant at the Deason Criminal Justice Reform Center at SMU Dedman School of Law. Lately, my cases have begun to seep into my subconscious. They don't haunt me as nightmares, nor do they frighten me.

The feeling is something subtler. A quiet, persistent unease.

It comes from spending hours each day taking notes on people whose lives are reduced to transcripts and statistics—stories of violence, systemic failure, and legal battles that often feel detached from the individuals they affect. I analyze patterns, track precedents, and contribute to a process that operates with precision but nearly always lacks empathy.

I gain valuable experience, sharpening my analytical skills and understanding the criminal justice system. But I lack the resources to help. I can document injustice, but I cannot correct it. I can understand the law, but I cannot argue it. I can recognize flaws in a defense, but I cannot advocate for change.

It's easy to become numb. But I can't let myself grow complacent.

This sense of unrest is at the heart of why I want to become a lawyer.

But it's not the whole story. My desire to become a lawyer is shaped not just by my work in criminal justice, but also by how I've navigated expectations as a young woman and by the quiet challenges of living with anxiety.

Growing up playing competitive sports, I learned how being female often meant fitting into an unwritten script. The girls favored weren't always the best players, they were the ones who smiled at coaches and stayed quiet unless spoken to. I was direct, determined, and focused. I was there to compete rather than conform. When you don't perform femininity as expected, you get passed over.

Those experiences taught me how easily people are dismissed for failing to play the roles others write for them. I carry that lesson into every room I enter. I lead with quiet confidence. I don't need to be the loudest to be effective. I prepare relentlessly, speak deliberately, and work hard to ensure I not only show up, but stand out.

That mindset defines how I will show up as an advocate.

Another part of who I am shapes how I see the law: my anxiety.

It doesn't scream, it whispers. It second-guesses even my best days. I'm a 4.0 student and I complete every task with care, but the voice in the back of my mind still says: Maybe you just got lucky. Living with anxiety means constantly proving things twice, once to the world, and once to myself. But anxiety has also made me disciplined. It has sharpened my attention to detail and heightened my self-awareness. It helps me anticipate pressure rather than crumble under it. It makes me more empathetic to others, especially clients whose experiences don't fit neatly into case files.

Law school is where everything I've experienced—my instinct to advocate, my discomfort with apathy, my meticulousness—can converge into purpose. I'm drawn to the law not only because I care about justice, but also because I'm built for the complexity, pressure, and responsibility it demands. I want to be a lawyer to carry the weight of people's stories. The law gives me a way to channel who I am into something bigger than myself. I'm not chasing a paycheck; I'm choosing a life of consequence.

I want to do more than take notes. I want to give a voice to those lost in the system, turning research into real advocacy. I want to walk into a courtroom knowing I have the power to change outcomes and provide real solutions where there were once only summaries and reports.

This feeling isn't just discomfort. It is purpose. In the end, becoming a lawyer isn't just a career goal, it's my way of transforming unease into impact.

I close my laptop, but the case lingers in my mind. The names, the evidence, the lives forever altered. I've spent hours dissecting files and tracing paths that led to tragedy, but knowing isn't enough. I want to fight for justice that at this moment feels out of reach.

Because if these stories follow me, I want to be the one who changes how they end.

From London to Dallas (and hopefully to Ft. Worth), my personal journey has shaped me into someone who sees law as a powerful tool for peaceful dialogue and social change. I am committed to utilizing law school and advocacy to think critically, communicate effectively, and advance social progress. My upbringing and worldview are thus closely aligned with Texas A&M Law's philosophy, which is grounded in the belief that the rigorous collision of ideas ultimately leads to the advancement of underrepresented voices.

Living in London as a child, I saw evidence of unrest between England and its minority communities. The 2011 London riots, like the 2005 riots in France, were both caused by the demonization of certain ethnic groups, mostly black and brown Africans and Middle Easterners. Although I was young, I had a sense of what was occurring: people were trying to gain a voice. It was clear to me how difficult it is for minority populations to be heard when they are routinely denigrated in social media and mainstream politics. As a result, over the years I have committed myself to remaining aware of worldwide injustices and the struggles of various peoples to have their voices heard.

This passion for equity and justice followed me to Dallas, where I saw firsthand the challenges faced by marginalized communities. These experiences inspired my work as a Research Assistant at SMU's Deason Criminal Justice Reform Center, where I have contributed to projects advocating for fairer criminal justice practices. My commitment to social justice also led me to tutor underprivileged students, ensuring that everyone has access to educational opportunities.

Majoring in Journalism with a minor in Corporate Communications and Public Affairs, alongside my pre-law focus, I've always been driven by a passion for uncovering facts and amplifying voices that often go unheard. At SMU, I used my writing to spotlight underrepresented communities, whether profiling civil rights icons like Rev. Cecil Williams or documenting the challenges faced by immigrants seeking asylum in the United States. In researching and writing about the National Immigrant Justice Center, I witnessed how effective legal advocacy can play an enormous role in alleviating the plight of underprivileged people. These experiences confirmed what I had known as a child, which is that my true passion lies in advocating for justice using words and, hopefully soon, the law.

As I have come to this realization, I also realized that I can learn from those with whom I disagree. Growing up, I often debated questions of politics and values with my father. Our discussions were spirited, sometimes even heated, but they always ended with mutual respect. He challenged me to defend my opinions with evidence, not just emotion, and I learned to listen closely so I could understand (not just rebut) his perspective. These conversations taught me the value of approaching disagreement with humility and curiosity, and that disagreement is not an obstacle to clarity, but an essential part of it.

In both my personal and professional life, I have come to see civil dialogue as a skill that requires discipline, patience, and empathy. Engaging respectfully with contested ideas has strengthened my ability to communicate clearly, to build relationships even across differences, and to remain open-minded without sacrificing my principles. These are the same qualities I hope to contribute to Texas A&M Law, where dialogue and debate are central not only in the classroom, but also to the very practice of law itself.

Throughout my academic career, I have balanced demanding roles, maintaining a 4.0 GPA while serving as an executive in Chi Omega, volunteering with Mustangs for Hope, and contributing to other community initiatives. Managing these responsibilities has sharpened my organizational skills and deepened my empathy, qualities I look forward to contributing to the learning environment and community at Texas A&M Law.

Ultimately, I hope to contribute to Texas A&M Law's vibrant intellectual community by promoting respectful, challenging dialogue, and by advocating for those whose voices are too often overlooked. My journey has given me a unique perspective that blends critical thinking, empathy, and a relentless commitment to justice. I am eager to join a law school community that values these qualities in pursuit of meaningful change.
